VOL. LXVII. WELLSBORO, TIOGA COUNTY, THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1923. NO. 25.

BRIEF RESUME OF WEEK'S PROGRAM

Wellsboro Chautauqua Will Present Many Excellent Features This Year

The Swathmore Chautauqua will open the seven days program in Wellsboro next Saturday and a splendid list of attractions are scheduled to appear. Nine concerts, three play companies and nine lecturers, in addition to the Junior Chautauqua are on the program and sufficient variety is promised, to please everyone.

Among the noted men to appear are: Hon. Wm. C. Redfield, who was Secretary of Commerce in the Wilson Cabinet. He will discuss the relationship of America to the other countries of the world and is ably fitted by training and experience to give his subject full justice.

Dennis McCarthy, the Irish Catholic humorist and philosopher is at his best in "A Poets Gospel of Good Will." He comes indorsed by Cardinal O'Connell and has been honored by Boston College.

Wm. H. Stout, big in body, mind and heart, is past President of the International Lyceum and Chautauqua Association and will give his ideas on a broader outlook in life, gained by many years of travel in every State in the Union. He is a splendid speaker and appears on the 4th day.

Many people have often wondered how Luther Burbank, the plant wizard of California, performs his miracles with plants, flowers and fruit. Henry Adrian will tell how he does it and will have many interesting specimens from the Burbank gardens to add interest to his lecture.

An extensive study of the Penal Institutions of America has been made by Frank Tannenbaum, and he will give a graphic description of his investigations. His articles in Century and other magazines recently, have attracted widespread interest.

One of the speakers has been a member of Congress for the past 18 years and is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. This is Hon. Henry T. Rainey, who will appear on the opening day. He is an authority on the Tariff and Revenue and will tell many interesting events happening in Washington during past years. He believes America has Turned the Tide and is on the road to normalcy.

The Gall Opera Company will give two programs of Opera music, in costume, featuring many of the hits in the popular operas of the past. Readings and Cello numbers add much to the enjoyment of these programs. Members of this company are also members of the Cleveland Opera Co. and the action songs are a new feature in concert work.

Ernest Toy, the Australian violinist, with Louise Stallings the American soprano, will appear on the 4th day in two programs which will appeal to all lovers of good music.

Among the popular attractions, Alton Packard, the Cartoonist' and Visocchi, the Piano Accordion soloist have been selected to give the closing program.

Although it was written more than three hundred years ago, "The Taming of the Shrew" is being enjoyed today just as much as it was then. It is Shakespear's most humorous play and has an appeal to all ages. The cast is headed by Moroni Olsen and Jeanet Young and all the actors have had many years stage experience. The costumes and stage setting are just the same as when given in Old England and unlike most plays of today, the success of the play does not depend upon these things. As Shakespear said, "The play is the thing."

Last year, a National competion was held, to find what the judges would consider the best American Comedy founded upon an American theme, there were over three hundred plays submitted, and the one chosen for first prize will be given on the fifth night. It is by a New York business man, Richard Purdy and is called "Crossed Wires." It is a three act Comedy, having any American City for its setting, and the whole audience takes part in the last act.

Many witty sparks fly from these crossed wires and the audience is amused throughout.

A great week is promised to the young people. Every morning there will be a story hour for the boys and girls, to be followed by games and athletic stunts for the boys, and rehearsals for the Pagent, "Her Family on Display" to be given on the last afternoon. This is founded upon the old story, "There was an old Woman who lived in a shoe" and a hundred children will be assigned parts.

The basic theme for the junior work will be the meaning of law and order, supplementing to a large degree, the teachings of the Church, School and Home, and the organization of Junior Town and election of officers is an important part of the Junior work.

The ticket Committee is meeting with splendid success and a large crowd is expected to be at the tent Saturday for the opening program. Tickets on sale at Blatchley, Bailey and Mitchell stores. A final meeting will be held at the Court House Friday evening at 7:30, of all guarantors at which time the Superintendent will complete plans for the Chautauqua.

TIOGA CO. AT PENN STATE.

Summer Course Closes Tomorrow After Successful Session.

The annual summer session of the Pennsylvania State College will close to-morrow and 20 students from Tioga county who have attended eight weeks of instruction will return to their homes this week-end. The majority of those making up this county's delegation are public school teachers who will now enjoy a brief vacation before the opening of the schools in September.

More than 2000 have attended the summer term at State College this year, and the session was voted to be one of the most successful ever held. The courses offered were more varied than ever before and a number of notable instructors assisted members of the college staff in the teaching work.

A noticeable feature of this year's summer term was the increased number of men in attendance. Whereas a few years ago the women out-numbered the men five to one, the ratio was less than two to one this year. During the winter term the situation is completely reversed, for there are 3000 men and only 300 women students.

The college registrar is now faced with the problem of turning away 1300 Pennsylvania boys and girls who desire to enter their State College, because there is not enough room for them. More than 2300 men and women, well qualified for admission, have already applied. The college trustees have authorized the admission of a class of 950, one of the largest ever, but this hardly relieves the situation. The problem is particularly acute concerning women, for there is room for only 50 new girls in the college dormitories. Five times that number have applied.

Among the Wellsboro students were Miss Minnie Mack and Carl Dewey.

Bitten By Rattlesnake.

Fred Horton, of Tioga, is in the Blossburg hospital in a serious condition as the result of being bitten twice by a rattlesnake last Monday.

The snake, which was captured alive a few days ago by Dr. C. R. Smith, of Tioga, had been kept, securely boxed, in Mr. Horton's barn. On Monday he took the reptile out of its nest to show to friends and, although he is accustomed to handling snakes, the rattler reached him with his fangs and bit him twice on the hand. A bystander, at the request of Mr. Horton, slashed the wounds with a knife and the victim was hurried to the Blossburg hospital where it is said he has a fair chance of recovery.

—Philip McLarch, of Geneva, was injured badly last Sunday, when the automobile he was driving was crowded off the State highway, near Blossburg, plunged down a 60-foot embankment and landed in a creek. Several other members of the motor party escaped injury.

MEMORIAL SERVICES HELD HERE FRIDAY

Wellsboro Pays Tribute to the Memory of Late President Harding

While the remains of our late chief executive were being conveyed to their last resting place at Marion, Ohio, while the final sad rites were being conducted there, Wellsboro people, like millions of others in the United States, in the cross-roads villages and the country districts, as well as the larger centers of population, paused in their daily pursuits purely in a spirit of reverence and as a last sincere tribute to the memory of the departed.

While the funeral at Marion was attended by thousands, it was indeed a simple ceremony entirely in keeping with the disposition of Warren Gamaliel Harding, the individual. There it was the old friends of his boyhood who gathered in silent grief to pay their last respects to the memory of their friend and neighbor, rather than as late President of the United States.

All the business places of Wellsboro were closed Friday afternoon, some of them all day, and a great congregation gathered at the Methodist church shortly after the noon hour where appropriate memorial services were held. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Stoody, offered a fervent prayer which was followed by the singing of "Lead Kindly Light." President Harding's favorite hymn. Addresses were made by Rev. Glen C. Davis, pastor of Christ's church, and by Hon. A. B. Dunsmore, United States Attorney for the Middle District of Pennsylvania.

To few public men is it given to be so sincerely mourned by millions of his people as it was to our late President. These millions of people showed their respect to his memory not because they were told to, but because they felt the loss of their leader and in all sincerity wanted to show their loyalty to his memory.

LOST IN BLACK FOREST.

Two Girls, Making Horseback Trip Have Rather Trying Experience.

Miss Bertha Wold, of Austin, and Miss Dorothy Williard, of Schenectady, had an experience last Friday night that was a "thriller." Miss Wold, who is an instructor of nurses in a New York City hospital, was the guest of Miss Willard and they conceived the novel idea of making a trip on horseback from the latter's home at Schenectady to Austin where they were to visit Miss Wold's parents.

Leaving Schenectady on Sunday, July twenty-second, they spent two weeks in covering the three hundred twenty-five miles, traveling by way of Cobelskill, Oneonta, New Milford, Montrose, Susquehanna, Mansfield, Troy, Wellsboro, Galeton and Hulls and reaching Austin late Saturday afternoon. All went well until Friday evening when, in attempting to take a short cut through the woods they became lost in the Black Forest. They dismounted and walked until dark then built a little fire, tethered their horses and took turns watching for bears, wild cats and snakes, which however, failed to appear. At daylight they started again and found their way to the pike where some men gave them some water—the first they had had in twenty-four hours. The remainder of the trip was easily accomplished and they are now resting and entertaining their friends with tales of their experience.

News 3,000 Miles By Phone.

How the long distance telephone can rise to an emergency was clearly demonstrated the night of President Harding's death in San Francisco.

Over the great reach of country from the Pacific Coast city to Philadelphia, Robert Barry, staff correspondent of the Public Ledger, dictated his story of more than 2000 words, giving in splendid detail the last moments of the President. So perfect was the transmission that the man in the Philadelphia office, with head-receiver clamped to his ears, took down the words as easily and unconcernedly as if they had come from a near-by police station.

Recourse to the telephone was necessary because of the late hour, 11:30 p. m., Philadelphia time, when the President died. That hour was close to edition time for the morning papers and the need for speed was imperative.

The telephone wires, comparatively uncrowded, responded effectively and registered a new record for news transmission over a great distance.

First Baptist Church.

Rev. Irving Reese, formerly of this boro, now of Westfield, N. Y. will occupy the pulpit next Lord's day morning. There will be no evening service in the church, but the Bible School will hold its usual session.

PROGRESS SPECIAL VISITS WELLSBORO

Over 2,000 People Viewed Interesting Exhibits Last Wednesday Evening

The "service progress special" of the New York Central lines, which visited Wellsboro from 7 to 10 o'clock last Wednesday evening, held many things of interest to the crowd that took advantage of the opportunity thus afforded to become acquainted, through working models, with the great progress made in the realm of transportation within the past fifty years and more. Fifteen hand carved models showing locomotive development from Newton's "tea kettle" to the Pacific type of to-day attracted a great deal of attention. The maker of these models was in attendance and discoursed interestingly on their formation and what they represent.

Electric models are also shown, motion pictures of railway progress, and various models of coaches showing their development from the crude affair of years ago to the modern all steel type.

The train is drawn by "engine 8000," the first of the latest type of Mikado freight locomotives—for their weight the most powerful in the world—the reigning monarch of the New York Central Lines road engines. Immediately following is "Engine 999," which still holds the world's record of 112.5 miles per hour, made in 1893. The Dewitt Clinton train of 1831 completes the locomotive group.

There are exhibits showing the important connection between railroads, industry and agriculture, with comprehensive charts on farm, crops and other statistics of the territory served by the New York Central Lines.

The "progress service special" as a means of providing entertainment and interesting instruction is assuredly a great success and affords thousands of people an opportunity to become informed on transportation and kindred subjects that otherwise would not be accorded them. It is estimated that fully 2000 people viewed the exhibit.

President Smith of the New York Central lines said in discussing the purpose of the train when it was first started on June 18. "It is the policy of the New York Central lines to discuss frankly with the public our policies, our ideals, our service, our equipment, our personnel. We want to retain old friends and make new ones on the basis of thorough knowledge and understanding. Thus we can serve the public as it should be served by a modern, efficient railroad."

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.—Realizing that she has a possible chance of being saved as the Lusitania is sinking, a stranger gives a young American girl a package which he asks her to deliver to the American ambassador in England. She is saved.

CHAPTER I.—In London, Former Lieut. "Tommy" Beresford and Miss Prudence Cowley—"Tuppence"—discharged army nurse, form an organization, "The Young Adventurers, Ltd." Tuppence makes a business appointment with a man, Edward Whittington, who offers her easy employment, but on giving her name as "Jane Finn," which she had heard on the street, Whittington shows agitation and Tuppence is told to return next day.

CHAPTER II.—In the morning the girl finds Whittington's office deserted. In answer to an advertisement signed "Jane Finn" the two receive notes from "Mr. Carter" and "Julius P. Hershelmmer." Carter is really a high government official. He speaks of a mysterious "Mr. Brown" as head of the Bolsheviks in England, and engages the pair to attempt to find Jane Finn, whom he is seeking for important reasons of state.

CHAPTER III.—Next day the pair visits Hershelmmer, American millionaire, living at the Ritz hotel. He is looking for his cousin, Jane Finn, who had disappeared after landing from the Lusitania's boats, and employs them to search for her. They discover a certain Mrs. Vandemeyer is a Lusitania survivor. Seeking information from her, Tuppence recognizes Whittington in a caller on Mrs. Vandemeyer. Tommy trails him.

CHAPTER IV

The House in Soho.

Whittington and his companion were walking at a good pace. Tommy started in pursuit at once, and was in time to see them turn the corner of the street. His vigorous strides soon enabled him to gain upon them, and by the time he, in his turn, reached the corner the distance between them was sensibly lessened. Their course was a zigzag one designed to bring them as quickly as possible to Oxford street. When at length they turned into it, proceeding in an easterly direction, Tommy slightly increased his pace. Little by little he gained upon them.

Just before the Bond Street tube station they crossed the road, Tommy, unperceived, faithfully at their heels, and entered the big Lyons'. There they went up to the first floor, and sat at a small table in the window. It was late, and the place was thinning out. Tommy took a seat at the table next to them, sitting directly behind Whittington in case of recognition. On the other hand, he had a full view of the second man and studied him attentively. He was fair, with a weak, unpleasant face, and Tommy put him down as being either a Russian or a Pole. He was probably about fifty years of age, his shoulders cringed a little as he talked, and his eyes, small and crafty, shifted unceasingly.

Whittington ordered a substantial lunch for himself and his companion; then, as the waitress withdrew, he moved his chair a little closer to the table and began to talk earnestly in a low voice. The other man joined in. Listen as he would, Tommy could only catch a word here and there; but the gist of it seemed to be some directions or orders which the big man was impressing on his companion, and with which the latter seemed from time to time to disagree. Whittington addressed the other as Boris.

Tommy caught the word "Ireland," several times, also "propaganda," but of Jane Finn there was no mention. Suddenly, in a lull in the clatter of the room, he got one phrase entire. Whittington was speaking. "Ah, but you don't know Flossie. She's a marvel. An archbishop would swear she was his own mother. She gets the voice right every time, and that's really the principal thing."

Tommy did not hear Boris' reply, but in response to it Whittington said something that sounded like: "Of course—only in an emergency. . . ."

Then he lost the thread again. But presently the phrases became distinct again whether because the other two had insensibly raised their voices, or because Tommy's ears were getting more attuned, he could not tell. But two words certainly had a most stimulating effect upon the listener. They were uttered by Boris and they were: "My Brown."

Whittington seemed to remonstrate with him, but he merely laughed.

"Why not, my friend? It is a name most respectable—most common. Did he not choose it for that reason? Ah, I should like to meet him—Mr. Brown."

There was a steely ring in Whittington's voice as he replied:

"Who knows? You may have met him already."

"Bah!" retorted the other. "That is children's talk—a fable for the police. Do you know what I say to myself sometimes? That he is a fable invented by the Inner Ring, a bogy to frighten us with. It might be so."

"And it might not."

"I wonder . . . or is it indeed true that he is with us and amongst us, unknown to all but a chosen few? If so, he keeps his secret well. And the idea is a good one, yes. We never know. We look at each other—one of us is Mr. Brown—which? He commands—but also he serves. Among us—in the midst of us. And no one knows which he is. . . ."

With an effort the Russian shook off the vagary of his fancy. He looked at his watch.

"Yes," said Whittington. "We might as well go."

He called the waitress and asked for his bill. Tommy did likewise, and a few moments later was following the two men down the stairs.

Outside, Whittington hailed a taxi, and directed the driver to go to Waterloo.

Taxis were plentiful here, and before Whittington's had driven off another was drawing up to the curb in obedience to Tommy's peremptory demand.

"Follow that other taxi," directed the young man. "Don't lose it."

The elderly chauffeur showed no interest. He merely grunted and jerked down his flag. The drive was uneventful. Tommy's taxi came to rest at the departure platform just after Whittington's. Tommy was behind him at the booking office. He took a first-class single ticket to Bournemouth, Tommy did the same. As he emerged, Boris remarked, glancing up at the clock: "You are early. You have nearly half an hour."

Boris' words had aroused a new train of thought in Tommy's mind. Clearly Whittington was making the journey alone, while the other remained in London. Therefore he was left with a choice as to which he would follow. Obviously, he could not follow both of them unless— Like Boris, he glanced up at the clock, and then to the announcement board of the trains. The Bournemouth train left at 3:30. It was now ten past. Whittington and Boris were walking up and down by the bookstall. He gave one doubtful look at them, then hurried into an adjacent telephone box. He dared not waste time in trying to get hold of Tuppence. In all probability she was still in the neighborhood of South Audley mansions. But there remained another ally. He rang up the Ritz and asked for Julius Hershelmmer. There was a click and a buzz. Oh, if only the young American was in his room! There was another click, and then, "Hello" in unmistakable accents came over the wire.

"That you, Hershelmmer? Beresford speaking. I'm at Waterloo—and followed Whittington and another man here. No time to explain. Whittington's off to Bournemouth by the 3:30. Can you get there by then?"

"Sure. I'll hustle."

The telephone rang off. Tommy put back the receiver with a sigh of relief. He felt instinctively that the American would arrive in time.

Whittington and Boris were still where he had left them. If Boris remained to see his friend off, all was well. Then Tommy fingered his pocket thoughtfully. In spite of the carte blanche assured to him, he had not yet acquired the habit of going about with any considerable sum of money on him. The taking of the first-class ticket to Bournemouth had left him with only a few shillings in his pocket. It was to be hoped that Julius would arrive better provided.

In the meantime, the minutes were creeping by.—Supposing Julius did not get there in time. Tommy felt cold waves of despair pass over him. Then a hand fell on his shoulder.

"Here I am, son. Your British traffic beats description! Put me wise to the crooks right away."

"That's Whittington—there, getting in now, that big dark man. The other is the foreign chap he's talking to."

"I'm onto them. Which of the two is my bird?"

"Got any money with you?"

Julius shook his head, and Tommy's face fell.

"I guess I haven't more than three or four hundred dollars with me at the moment," explained the American.

Tommy gave a faint whoof of relief.

"Oh, Lord, you millionaires! You don't talk the same language! Climb aboard the lugger. Here's your ticket. Whittington's your man."

"Me for Whittington!" said Julius darkly. The train was just starting as he swung himself aboard. "So long, Tommy." The train slid out of the station.

Tommy drew a deep breath. The man Boris was coming along the platform toward him. Tommy allowed him to pass and then followed him at a judicious distance.

They reached at length a small dilapidated square. The houses there had a sinister air in the midst of their dirt and decay. Boris looked round, and Tommy drew back into the shelter of a friendly porch. From there he watched Boris go up the steps of a particularly evil-looking house and rap sharply, with a peculiar rhythm, on the door. It was opened promptly, he said a word or two to the doorkeeper, then passed inside. The door was shut to again.

It was at this juncture that Tommy lost his head. What he ought to have done, what any sane man would have done, was to remain patiently where he was and wait for his man to come out again. What he did do was entirely foreign to the sober common sense which was, as a rule, his leading characteristic. Something, as he expressed it, seemed to snap in his brain. Without a moment's pause for reflection, he, too, went up the steps, and reproduced as far as he was able the peculiar knock.

The door swung open with the same promptness as before. A villainous-faced man with close-cropped hair stood in the doorway.

"Well?" he grunted.

It was at that moment that the full realization of his folly began to come home to Tommy. But he dared not hesitate. He seized at the first words that came into his mind.

"Mr. Brown?" he said.

To his surprise, the man stood aside.

"Upstairs," he said, jerking his thumb over his shoulder, "second door on your left."

Taken aback though he was by the man's words, Tommy did not hesitate. If audacity had successfully carried him so far, it was to be hoped it would carry him yet farther. He quietly passed into the house and mounted the ramshackle staircase. Everything in the house was filthy beyond words.

Tommy proceeded leisurely. By the time he reached the bend in the staircase, he had heard the man below disappear into a back room. Clearly no suspicion attached to him as yet. To come to the house and ask for "Mr. Brown" appeared indeed to be a reasonable and natural proceeding.

At the top of the stairs Tommy halted to consider his next move. In front of him ran a narrow passage, with doors opening on either side of it. From the one nearest him on the left came a low murmur of voices. It was this room which he had been directed to enter. But what held his glance fascinated was a small recess immediately on his right, half concealed by a torn velvet curtain. It was directly opposite the left-handed door and, owing to its angle, it also commanded a good view of the upper part of the staircase. As a hiding place for one or, at a pinch, two men, it was ideal, being about two feet deep and three feet wide. It attracted Tommy mightily. He thought things over in his usual slow and steady way, deciding that the mention of "Mr. Brown" was not a request for an individual, but in all probability a password used by the gang. His lucky use of it had gained him admission. So far he had aroused no suspicion. But he must decide quickly on his next step.

It seemed to him that luck had served him very well so far, but that there was such a thing as trusting it too far. To enter the room at the left was a colossal risk. He could not hope to sustain his part indefinitely; sooner or later he was almost bound to betray himself, and then he would have thrown away a vital chance in mere foolhardiness.

A repetition of the signal knock sounded on the door below, and Tommy, his mind made up, slipped quickly into the recess, and cautiously drew the curtain farther across, so that it shielded him completely from sight. There were several rents and slits in the ancient material which afforded him a good view. He would watch events, and any time he chose could, after all, join the assembly, modeling his behavior on that of the new arrival.

The man who came up the staircase with a furtive, soft-footed tread was unknown to Tommy. He was obviously of the very dregs of society. The low beetling brows, and the criminal leer, the bestiality of the whole countenance were new to the young man, though he was a type that Scotland Yard would have recognized at a glance.

The man passed the recess, breathing heavily as he went. He stopped at the door opposite, and gave a repetition of the signal knock. A voice inside called out something, and the man opened the door and passed in, affording Tommy a momentary glimpse of the room inside. He thought there must be about four or five people seated round a long table that took up most of the space, but his attention was caught and held by a tall man with close-cropped hair and a short, pointed, naval-looking beard, who sat at the head of the table with papers in front of him. As the newcomer entered, he glanced up, and with a correct, but curiously precise enunciation which attracted Tommy's notice, he asked:

"Your number, comrade?"

"Fourteen, guv'nor," replied the other hoarsely.

"Correct."

The door shut again.

"If that isn't a German, I'm a Dutchman!" said Tommy to himself. "And running the show darned systematically too—as they always do. Lucky I didn't roll in. I'd have given the wrong number, and there would have been the deuce to pay. No, this is the place for me. Hulla, here's another knock."

This visitor proved to be of an entirely different type to the last. Tommy recognized in him an Irish Sinn Feiner. Certainly Mr. Brown's organization was a far-reaching concern. The common criminal, the well-bred Irish gentleman, the pale Russian, and the efficient German master of the ceremonies! Truly a strange and sinister gathering. Who was this man, who held in his finger these curiously variegated links of an unknown chain?

Two knocks followed in quick succession on the door below. The first man was quite unknown to Tommy, who put him down as a city clerk. A quiet, intelligent-looking man, rather shabbily dressed. The second was of the working classes, and his face was vaguely familiar to the young man.

Three minutes later came another, a man of commanding appearance, exquisitely dressed, and evidently well born. His face, again, was not unknown to the watcher, though he could not for the moment put a name to it.

After his arrival there was a long wait. In fact, Tommy concluded that the gathering was now complete, and was just cautiously creeping out from his hiding place, when another knock sent him scuttling back to cover.

This last-comer came up the stairs so quietly that he was almost abreast of Tommy before the young man had realized his presence.

He was a small man, very pale, with a gentle, almost womanish air. The angle of the cheek-bones hinted at his Slavonic ancestry, otherwise there was nothing to indicate his nationality. As he passed the recess, he turned his head slowly. The strange light eyes seemed to burn through the curtain; Tommy could hardly believe that the man did not know he was there and in spite of himself he shivered. He was no more fanciful than the majority of young Englishmen, but he could not rid himself of the impression that some unusually potent force emanated from the man. The creature reminded him of a venomous snake.

A moment later his impression was proved correct. The newcomer knocked at the door as all had done, but his reception was very different. The bearded man rose to his feet, and all the others followed suit. The German came forward and shook his hands. His heels clicked together.

"We are honored," he said. "We are greatly honored. I much feared that it would be impossible."

The other answered in a low voice that had a kind of hiss in it:

"There were difficulties. It will not be possible again, I fear. But one meeting is essential—to define my policy. I can do nothing without—Mr. Brown. He is here?"

The change in the German's voice was audible as he replied with slight hesitation:

"We have received a message. It is impossible for him to be present in person." He stopped, giving a curious impression of having left the sentence unfinished.

A very slow smile overspread the face of the other. He looked round at a circle of uneasy faces.

"Ah! I understand. I have read of his methods. He works in the dark and trusts no one. But, all the same, it is possible that he is among us now. . . ." He looked round him again, and again that expression of fear swept over the group. Each man seemed eyeing his neighbor doubtfully.

The Creature Reminded Him of a Venomous Snake.

The Russian tapped his cheek.

"So be it. Let us proceed."

The German indicated the place he had been occupying at the head of the table. The Russian demurred, but the other insisted.

"It is the only possible place," he said, "for—Nummber One. Perhaps Number Fourteen will shut the door?"

In another moment Tommy was again confronting bare wooden panels, and the voices within had sunk once more to a mere undistinguishable murmur. Tommy became restive. The conversation he had overheard had stimulated his curiosity. He felt that, by hook or by crook, he must hear more.

After listening intently for a minute or two, he put his head round the curtain. The passage was deserted. Tommy bent down and removed his shoes, then leaving them behind the curtain, he walked gingerly out on his stockinged feet, and kneeling down by the closed door, he laid his ear cautiously to the crack. To his intense annoyance he could distinguish little more: just a chance word here and there if a voice was raised, which merely served to whet his curiosity still farther.

He eyed the handle of the door tentatively. Could he turn it by degrees so gently and imperceptibly that those in the room would notice nothing? He decided that with great care it could be done. Very slowly, a fraction of an inch at a time, he moved it round, holding his breath in his excessive care. A little more—a little more still—would it never be finished? Ah! at last it would turn no farther.

He stayed so for a minute or two, then drew a deep breath, and pressed it ever so slightly inward. The door did not budge. Tommy was annoyed. If he had to use too much force, it would almost certainly creak. He waited until the voices rose a little, then he tried again. Still nothing happened. He increased the pressure. Had the beastly thing stuck? Finally, in desperation, he pushed with all his might. But the door remained firm, and at last the truth dawned upon him. It was locked or bolted on the inside.

For a moment or two Tommy's indignation got the better of him.

"Well, I'm d—d!" he said. "What a dirty trick!"

As his indignation cooled, he prepared to face the situation. Clearly the first thing to be done was to restore the handle to its original position. If he let it go suddenly, the men inside would be almost certain to notice it, so, with the same infinite pains, he reversed his former tactics. All went well, and with a sigh of relief the young man rose to his feet. There was a certain bulldog tenacity about Tommy that made him slow to admit defeat. Checkmated for the moment, he was far from abandoning the conflict. He still intended to hear what was going on in the locked room. As one plan had failed, he must hunt about for another.

He looked round him. A little farther along the passage on the left was a second door. He slipped silently along to it. He listened for a moment or two, then tried the handle. It yielded, and he slipped inside.

The room, which was untenanted, was furnished as a bedroom. Like everything else in the house, the furniture was falling to pieces, and the dirt was, if anything, more abundant.

But what interested Tommy was the thing he had hoped to find, a communicating door between the two rooms, upon the left by the window. Carefully closing the door into the passage behind him, he stepped across to the other and examined it closely. The bolt was shot across it. It was very rusty, and had clearly not been used for some time. By gently wriggling it to and fro, Tommy managed to draw it back without making too much noise. Then he repeated his former maneuvers with the handle—this time with complete success. The door swung open—a crack, a mere fraction, but enough for Tommy to hear what went on. There was a velvet portiere on the inside of this door which prevented him from seeing, but he was able to recognize the voices with a reasonable amount of accuracy.

The Sinn Feiner was speaking. His rich Irish voice was unmistakable:

"That's all very well. But more money is essential. No money—no results!"

Another voice, which Tommy rather thought was that of Boris replied:

"Will you guarantee that there are results?"

"In a month from now—sooner or later as you wish—I will guarantee you such a reign of terror in Ireland as shall shake the British empire to its foundations."

There was a pause, and then came the soft, sibilant accents of Number One:

"Good! You shall have the money. Boris, you will see to that."

Boris asked a question:

"Via the Irish Americans, and Mr. Potter, as usual?"

"I guess that'll be all right!" said a new voice, with a transatlantic intonation, "though I'd like to point out, here and now, that things are getting a mite difficult. There's not the sympathy there was, and a growing disposition to let the Irish settle their own affairs without interference from America."

Tommy felt that Boris had shrugged his shoulders as he answered: "Does that matter, since the money only nominally comes from the States?"

"The chief difficulty is the landing of the ammunition," said the Sinn Feiner. "The money is conveyed in easily enough—thanks to our colleague here."

"That is settled, then," said the sibilant tones. "Now, in the matter of the loan to an English newspaper, you have arranged the details satisfactorily, Boris?"

"I think so."

"That is good. An official denial from Moscow will be forthcoming if necessary."

There was a pause, and then the clear voice of the German broke the silence:

"I am directed by Mr. Brown to place the summaries of the reports from the different unions before you. That of the miners is most satisfactory. We must hold back the railways. There may be trouble with the A. S. E."

For a long time there was a silence, broken only by the rustle of papers and an occasional word of explanation from the German. Then Tommy heard the light tap-tap of fingers, drumming on the table.

"And—the date, my friend?" said Number One.

"The 29th."

The Russian seemed to consider.

"That is rather soon."

"I know. But it was settled by the principal Labor leaders, and we cannot seem to interfere too much. They must believe it to be entirely their own show."

The Russian laughed softly, as though amused.

"Yes, yes," he said. "That is true. They must have no inkling that we are using them for our own ends. They are honest men—and that is their value to us. It is curious—but you cannot make a revolution without honest men. The instinct of the populace is infallible." He paused, and then repeated, as though the phrase pleased him: "Every revolution has had its honest men. They are soon disposed of afterward."

There was a sinister note in his voice.

The German resumed: "Clymes must go. He is too far-seeing. Number Fourteen will see to that."

There was a hoarse murmur.

"That's all right, guv'nor." And then after a moment or two: "Suppose I'm nabbed."

"You will have the best legal talent to defend you," replied the German quietly. "But in any case you will wear gloves fitted with the finger prints of a notorious housebreaker. You have little to fear."

"Oh, I ain't afraid, guv'nor. All for the good of the cause. The streets is going to run with blood, so they say." He spoke with a grim relish. "Dreams of it, sometimes, I does. And diamonds and pearls rolling about in the gutter for anyone to pick up!"

Tommy heard a chair shifted. Then Number One spoke: "Then all is arranged. We are assured of success?"

"I—think so." But the German spoke with less than his usual confidence.

Number One's voice held suddenly a dangerous quality:

"What has gone wrong?"

"Nothing; but—"

"But what?"

"The Labor leaders. Without them, as you say, we can do nothing. If they do not declare a general strike on the 29th—"

"Why should they not?"

"As you've said, they're honest. And, in spite of everything we've done to discredit the government in their eyes, I'm not sure that they haven't got a sneaking faith and belief in it."

"But—"

"I know. They abuse it unceasingly. But, on the whole, public opinion swings to the side of the government. They will not go against it."

Again the Russian's fingers drummed on the table.

"To the point, my friend. I was given to understand that there was a certain document in existence which assured success."

"That is so. If that document were placed before the leaders, the result would be immediate. They would publish it broadcast throughout England, and declare for the revolution without a moment's hesitation. The government would be broken finally and completely."

"Then what more do you want?"

"The document itself," said the German bluntly.

"Ah! It is not in your possession? But you know where it is?"

"No."

"Does anyone know where it is?"

"One person—perhaps. And we are not sure of that even."

"Who is that person?"

"A girl."

Tommy held his breath.

"A girl?" The Russian's voice rose contemptuously. "And you have not made her speak? In Russia we have ways of making a girl talk."

"This case is different," said the German sullenly.

"How—different?" He paused a moment, then went on: "Where is the girl now?"

"The girl?"

"Yes."

"She is—"

But Tommy heard no more. A crashing blow descended on his head, and all was darkness.

New Australian Capital.

Canberra, in New South Wales, was chosen some time ago to be the federal capital of the commonwealth of Australia, and authority for the same was granted to the Australian parliament, but at present Melbourne, capital of the state of Victoria, is the seat of government and temporary capital. The construction of the federal capitol at Canberra is proceeding apace, and as soon as it is completed that place will become the permanent capital.

SKILLED IN "HIGH FINANCE"

Employee's Story Should Have Warned Banker That He Was Unsafe Man to Have Around.

A neighbor of mine dropped in at meal time recently to tell me of a St. Louis banker friend who met in a self-serve restaurant one of his own employees. As the banker and his clerk sat munching their simple rations, the employee happened to look at his watch.

"Handsome watch, that," remarked the banker.

"Yes," replied the clerk, "it is a nice watch. Funny thing about that, too"—and he went on to tell how he happened to buy the watch. It seems that he was short of money at a roadhouse one night and was obliged to cash a check for $40, though he chanced at that moment to have no funds to his credit. The next morning he tried to borrow money to deposit before the check should come in, but was unable to raise more than $5. While wondering what to do, he happened to see the sign of an installment jewelry place. There he bought a $75 watch on a down payment of $5—after proving that he had a good business connection—and a few minutes later he pawned the watch for $40, which he promptly deposited against the check of the night before.

"I should immediately have discharged the fellow," the banker said, in telling the clerk's story. "He was too slick a man to have around a bank. But I didn't, and now—well, sure enough, last week he got away with $23,000."—Fred C. Kelly in The Nation's Business.

ISOLDE WAGNER'S DAUGHTER

German Courts Settle Dispute as to Legitimacy of Offspring of Famous Musician.

Frau Isolde Biedler, the eldest daughter of Richard Wagner, was born fifty-six years ago, although her mother, Cosima, was legally the wife of Hans VonBuelow, the composer and pianist. In the period preceding Isolde's birth, Cosima, Wagner and Buelow lived together, but Wagner always regarded Isolde as his daughter, and named her after the favorite of his opera characters. Isolde became the wife of Johann Biedler, a well-known German orchestra leader. Several years ago she defended her illegitimacy in court, when her sister Eva sought to deprive her of any share in the Wagner estate on the ground that Isolde was the daughter of Buelow, not of Wagner. Eva is the wife of Houston Stewart Chamberlain, an English author, who is a naturalized citizen of Germany, and who, during the late war, received the iron cross from the ex-kaiser as a reward for his bitter attacks on England, published in the German magazines.

Frau Cosima testified to her belief that Buelow was the father of Isolde, but the courts decided that Isolde is Wagner's daughter.

Good oil—or trouble

Knocks, burned-out bearings, scored cylinders and carbon are all largely due to poor oil.

There's an easy way to get good oil, that lubricates and prolongs your car's life. Insist on Sunoco Motor Oil.

It's made in all necessary types. One of them is scientifically correct for your motor. Every one is wholly distilled, free of all impurities. There is no "cylinder stock" in Sunoco, the gummy residue that forms carbon and starts trouble. That's where Sunoco differs from other oils—there is not a drop of "cylinder stock" in any type of Sunoco.

Sunoco lasts longer and makes your car last longer. You'll have fewer repairs and use less oil with Sunoco in the crankcase. Try it next time. You'll be surprised at your car's power.

Ask your dealer for

SUNOCO
THE DISTILLED OIL

of the type specified for your car on his Sunoco Lubrication Chart. If he does not have Sunoco, ask him to get it for you.

You'll find some important facts on lubrication in our booklet, "What's Happening Inside Your Motor." Call, write or phone us for a copy.

OLE BULL'S CASTLE.

Crowds Visiting the Historic Ruins Every Sunday—Picnic Grounds.

A Coudersport correspondent of the Williamsport Sun writes thus entertainingly of Ole Bull's castle, that historic Potter County spot that was the home of the noted violinist who, it is said, charmed even the wild beasts with his harmony.

"Large crowds are being attracted each Sunday to the place known as Ole Bull's castle, much of which now is in State forests and game preserves, while fire towers look down on the ruins of the old castle and concert hall. Ole Bull, a world-famed violinist, years ago looked down over Potter county and saw here in the unbroken wilderness along Kettle creek, the same stream which today drains a land of promise for oil speculators, a spot where he could establish for his countrymen across the sea a new Norway.

It was in 1852 that Ole Bull visited Williamsport and learned of the pathless wilds to the north. With money earned in his triumphant tours he bought a tract of 11,144 acres in Abbott and Stewardson townships of today, paying $10,000. Here he established a home for himself, his violin and his countrymen. An advance guard of thirty colonists arrived in 1853. Four villages were laid out, Oleona, New Norway, New Bergen, and Walhalla. Oleona was named for the musician, New Norway and New Bergen were to remind the Norwegians of the land from which they came, while in Walhalla were recollections of the old Scandinavian mythology, the mansion of the gods and the warlike paradise of heroes. The largest settlement was near Oleona, where sixteen log cabins were built. Later nearly one hundred more colonists arrived.

"About a mile from Oleona, near Stonehouse, on the crest of a bluff where Bull run empties into Kettle creek, Ole Bull erected his castle and concert hall. There he would direct activities of the colonists. There was unfurled first the flag of the settlement bearing a cross of Norway in the center, surrounded by Stars and Stripes. From far and wide came gifts and offers of help. Royalty and men of state, the humble and great, all were eager to aid. Henry Clay sent fine horses from Kentucky, donations of all kinds poured in.

Today but few ruins are left to mark the spot. The colonists became dissatisfied. They had no way to make their living. Soon it was discovered the title to the land was not clear. Before long Ole Bull, penniless, made his way to Philadelphia seeking funds. He did not return. The colonists sold out and moved on to Wisconsin, Minnesota and other western states. Along the Jersey Shore turnpike from Coudersport to the old castle site are few human inhabitants today. Here and there a fire tower looks down upon lands much the same as they were in Ole Bull's day. But Kettle creek flows on past the site of Oleona, through the lands of Walhalla to the oil country farther south."

GOOD NEWS

Many Wellsboro Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the many bad sufferers in Wellsboro are glad to learn where relief may be found. Many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Our citizens are telling the good news of their experience with this tested remedy: Here is an example worth reading:

Mrs. Walter F. Dewey, 11 East Ave., Wellsboro, says: "My kidneys caused me to suffer a lot with backaches. There was a steady, dull ache across the small of my back that kept me miserable. When I swept, my back gave out. I was subject to headaches and my kidneys acted irregularly. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Kentch's Drug Store, and they soon removed the backaches and put my kidneys in good order."

DUDE RANCHES IN WEST.

Easterners Yearning for Open Spaces Satisfied at a Profit.

The latest step in the evolution of the great wild west is said to be the "Dude Ranch." Everybody who ever saw Buffalo Bill's show or the "101 Ranch" secretly aspired to get out some day and rub elbows with the redskins and kill a few grizzlies.

It is said that in the last four years a lot of enterprising ranchers of Wyoming and other western States decided to satisfy the innate yearning of the eastern citybred and at the same time make it so comfortable and pleasant that the dude wouldn't groan at the extraction of a fair portion of his annual dividends. The fact that the sheep and cow business was in a slump and that some of the ranches were not paying too well helped the movement along.

So one ranch after another set up in the tourist business—there are at least fifty well-established dude ranches in Wyoming and others in Montana and Idaho. Some of these ranches are in the Jackson Hole, the Buffalo, the Cody and the Sheridan countries.

The dude ranches are in varying stages of evolution. Some have imported cooks and modern plumbing, and already are talking of steam heat and player pianos. Others retain the pioneer atmosphere, and let the dudes eat off oilcloth and sleep in a bunk house and play the phonograph.

But every dude ranch has a dude wrangler, who rounds up the dudes and caters to them. A good wrangler is a very gifted person. He must get his dudes out on good old nags and make them think they're riding the real old untamed mustangs. He must tell glorious lies about the old days, and be able to re-create by campfire the atmosphere of Injun-attack-impending. And, of course, he must be able to guide the hungry trout right up to the dude's brown hackle.

NEW YORK CITY'S POPULATION.

Daily Aggregation of 6,200,000 Persons Within Its Limits.

New York City now has 5,800,000 inhabitants, plus 245,000 daily arriving commuters from surroundg suburbs, 118,000 visitors daily from other parts of the country, 5,000 daily average arrivals from foreign ports, or a daily average aggregate of practically 6,200,000 persons within a city which embraces land territory equivalent to an area 30 miles long by 10 miles wide, and includes all of two large islands, the western end of Long Island, a district of mainland and more than 20 smaller islands.

In this civic area there are 60 legitimate dramatic theaters (with seatin capacities ranging from 299 to about 1,750); 29 vaudeville houses (with seating capacity averaging around 1,500), and 30 large and 450 smaller movie houses, and 324,000 automobiles of all varieties, including trucks and busses.

New York City daily increases its local population by 6.6 per cent. Of these visiting transients, 4.2 per cent are suburban commuters, 2.3 per cent are outside visitors arriving by land and .086 per cent are persons coming from foreign parts.

In the United States generally there are 459 cities with populations ranging from 10,000 to 25,000 and altogether these 459 cities have 6,900,000 people, or not so very many more than New York alone has in a single day.

New York's dramatic theaters, averaging 1,100 people a night, entertain an aggregate of about 66,000 daily in the theatrical season, and the 480 movies average about 360,000 aggregate spectators for all their showings, while the vaudeville houses probably show to an aggregate daily of approximately 53,000 persons.

Applying these figures in percentages, we find that he average American small city of 20,000 people on the New York basis, would have to get 1,300 transient visitors a day, with 840 of them suburban commuters, 460 of them arrivals from a distance, and 17 of them from foreign parts; that such a city would have to have daily at all its movie showings an aggregate of 1,100 spectators, and would have to have two regular theatrical performances a week, with 1,250 at each, and two vaudeville performances a week, with 1,100 people at each, and would have to have 1,000 automobiles in town regularly.

Harding's Estate, $750,000.

Harding's estate will amount to about three quarters of a million dollars, all of which, according to the provisions of his will, goes to his widow, Mrs. Florence Kling Harding.

Mr. Harding made a new will not long before he left Washington for Alaska last June, and placed all his personal affairs in such shape that in the event of his failure to return alive they owuld give his widow the least concern and worry.

The Harding will is not to be filed in Washington for the reason that he owns no property there except personal effects at the White House and funds in bank.

SAFETY LESSONS FOR AUTO DRIVERS

Prepared by Metro Stations, Inc., for the Information of Tioga County Motorists.

Lesson No. 4—Rules of the road.

1. Almost every State and community has its own traffic laws, and drivers should be thoroughly familiar with all laws that apply in the locations where they have occasion to drive. A copy of the State laws can usually be secured by addressing the Scretary of State at the State capitol; local ordinances from the local police department.

2. There are, however, many laws that are universal enough to be called common "courtesies" or rules of the road.

3. Every driver should extend the same courtesies to "the other fellow" that he expects the other fellow to extend to him.

4. Every driver, of course, knows that he should pass to the right when meeting other vehicles going in the opposite direction. Slow moving vehicles should keep to the extreme right.

5. Always sound the horn and pass on the left when passing other vehicles going in the same direction. This applies when passing all vehicles except street cars and vehicles traveling in the street car tracks. When at street intersections, on curves, or when going up or down hill, never pass another vehicle going in the same direction.

6. At street intersections give the right of way to the car on your right. Do not presume too much when you have the right of way, perhaps the other fellow doesn't know it.

7. When stopping or parking a car, see that the right side (not the left side) is toward the curb. The wheels should be cramped to the right so the car cannot move far accidentally. Make sure that the emergency brake is on and that the gears are in neutral before leaving the car. Do not stop car within 15 feet of a fire hydrant.

8. Always signal when you expect signal by extending the arm. If the signal by extending the arm. It the car body or load prevents persons ahead and behind from seeing arm signals, a good type of mechanical signalling device should be installed on the car.

9. It is a gentlemanly act as well as a safety precaution to dim your lights when approaching another car in the dark.

10. See that your license tags are installed in the position specified by law and that they are clearly visible under all conditions.

THE PRICE OF BLOOD

"Then Judas, which had betrayed Jesus, when he saw that He was condemned, repented himself, and brought again the thirty pieces of silver to the chief priests and elders, saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood. And they said, What is that to us? See thou to that.

And he cast down the pieces of silver in the temple, and departed, and went and hanged himself.

And the chief priests took the silver pieces, and said, It is not lawful for to put them into the treasury, because IT IS THE PRICE OF BLOOD.

And they took counsel, and bought with the potter's field, to bury strangers in." Matt 27:1-7.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16, 1923.

The men who wrote the so-called song, "Yes, We Have," etc., are said to have made a fortune out of it. Now those who write the laws of the country should provide a fit punishment for them.

Motor trucks last year carried, for hauls of various lengths, a tonnage greater than 50 per cent of that of all railroads combined, declared James R. Howard, president of the National Transportation Institute, in a conference of State highway commissioners recently.

The United States will be without a vice president for the next 18 months. Vice President Coolidge has become president. Secretary of State Hughes will succeed him in case of death, but does not become vice president. Senator A. W. Cummins, president pro tempore will preside over the sessions of the senate in place of Mr. Coolidge.

Director Scobey, of the mint, has given orders for the production by the Philadelphia mint of a bronze medallion of President Harding. The medallions will carry on one side the face of the late chief executive in bas relief and on the other side the dates of his birth, inauguration and death. They will be sold to the public at $1.52 each.

Since 1918 Pennsylvania has constructed almost 2100 miles of durable highway—highway into which concrete has entered in some form. The maintenance forces of the Department of Highways in the last five years have resurfaced over a thousand miles of macadam road. It is now possible to travel continuously on improved reads in Pennsylvania for a distance of 1400 miles without covering the same ground twice.

The report of 102 commercial apple growers on August 1 indicates a 53 per cent. normal crop, estimated to produce 612,712 bushels, the Department of Agriculture announced recently. The orchards are in 16 counties, but the department points out that the estimate "can in no way be taken as representing the total commercial apple crop of the State nor complete production figures for any of the 16 counties."

Anthracite coal production in Pennsylvania last year aggregated 53,910,201 tons of 2,000 pounds each, reports made public last Saturday by the department of mines showed. This was a decrease of 16,448,441 tons compared with the 1921 production and was due to the prolonged suspension of operations because of the wage controversy. The anthracite mines employed 159,880 persons in 1912, compared with 161,926 in 1921.

It is said that President and Mrs. Coolidge are having a hard time to realize that they are no longer free to stroll at will about the city, but that their steps must be dogged by Secret Service men. Each morning the President takes a walk upon the streets before the masses of citizens are abroad, but now he is accompanied by his protectors. These report that not once has Mr. Coolidge been recognized by passers-by. His personality has not yet grown familiar. The same is true of the First Lady of the Land. She goes shopping with one or two friends, and her identity seems never to be suspected, either by the clerks or by the street passer.

CANADA TRIED PROHIBITION.

Majority of People of Dominion Not In Favor of It.

With America's dry laws promising to be vital issues in the coming Presidential election, Americans should study the causes behind the rapid decline of prohibition in Canada, according to Charles S. Wood, executive chairman of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment.

After a trial of prohibition over a period of several years, Mr. Wood has pointed out in a statement to voters of Pennsylvania that more than 40 per cent of the people of the Dominion of Canada have decided against prohibition by law. He asserted that Canada has discovered through sad experience that prohibition laws do not prohibit but rather make for intemperance, disregard for law and official corruption.

"Prohibition," said Mr. Wood, "is losing ground very rapidly in Canada. Ontario, the most populous province, has swept from power the Farm-Labor Government which stood for no tinkering with the present frigid dry law, and returned to the Conservatives, who promised a referendum as to whether prohibition shall be continued. But the worst blow to absolute prohibition was the tremendous vote in Manitoba, which is inhabited by a considerable proportion of settlers from the United States, to abandon prohibition for a system of Government control similar to the law establishing the Quebec Liquor Commission, which has just completed a successful and profitable two years'

BITUMINOUS COAL SUPPLY.

Operators Promise Increased Quantity at Fair Price If Miners Strike.

Bituminous coal, at prices that will meet government and public approval will be rushed into all anthracite-using sections in sufficient quantity to prevent suffering, in the event that the United Mine Workers of America call an anthracite strike in September.

This is the promise of bituminous operators special representatives went before the Coal Commission in Washington recently with a definite offer to turn over sufficient machinery to carry out this plan and a further offer to make bituminous prices to meet government approval, this to free the industry of any possibility of being branded with responsibility for speculators' prices in case of a fuel shortage.

John C. Brydon, chairman of the committee, in announcing its emergency plan took the occasion to refute the charge made by John L. Lewis that the committee is primarily non-union. Sixty per cent of the tonnage represented is union, he said.

"We are not concerned, as Mr. Lewis pretends to believe," Mr. Brydon declared, "with the issue of unionism and non-unionism. We are really concerned in an effort to prevent a stoppage in the production of coal in the United States during the coming winter."

Mr. Brydon took exception to the statement of the mine workers' president that the bituminous operators have a "slush fund." A detailed accounting on bituminous operators' special committee's expenditures will be filed with the United States coal commission, he said, and he challenged the United Mine Workers to do the same with their funds obtained through the check-off.

U. S. TO FACE HARD TIMES

That Is the Opinion of Europeans As Stated to Americans Abroad.

Europeans think Americans are living in a "fools' paradise" and that they will wake up to face severe times, Norman H. Davis, formerly financial adviser to the peace commission and Under Secretary of State in the Wilson Administration, declared on his arrival on the Paris from a tour abroad.

Europeans, he said, thought Americans would "wake up when their purchasing power is completely exhausted and their farmers see their products stacked up in the field and warehouse unsold."

Unless the situation is intelligently dealt with, the United States, and particularly the farmers, will feel the effects of it, thinks Mr. Davis.

In Europe, he asserted, the feeling was that America would be forced to co-operate in the settlement of world problems from a selfish, if from no other purpose. Europe, he added, was comforted by this belief in all her embarrassing moments. Davis said he found the general economic situation of Europe improved.

INCREASE IN DIVORCES.

1922 Ratio 9.3 Divorces to Each 100 Marriages Survey Shows.

As a result of nation wide survey of the divorce records a sharp increase in number is reported for 1922 over any previous year.

The 1922 ratio was almost half again as large as it was in 1916, there having been almost 9.3 divorces to each 100 marriages in 1922 compared with almost 6.3 in 1916. Analysis of the statistics for the six States shows the number of marriages in 1922 one-eighth less than in 1916, while the number of divorces was almost one-third more.

The States covered in reports were New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticutt, New Jersey and Delaware. Marriages in the States in 1922 numbered 80,883 as compared with 92,533 in 1916, and divorces 7,513, compared with 5,793. There was a decrease of 11,648 marriages in the States or about 12 1-2 per cent, while divorces increased 1,720 in number or almost 30 per cent.

Auto Races at Altoona on Labor Day.

The world's fastest auto drivers will smash the world's record on the world's fastest board track at Altoona on Labor Day. Jack Prince, builder of speedway bowls, has guaranteed a new record will be hung up when the Altoona speedway has its grand opening.

Twelve noted racing drivers have entered the opening classic there. Additional entries are signing daily for the 200-mile auto race which will mark the opening of the track. They will compete for a purse of $24,000 before the greatest throng of auto speed enthusiasts that ever gathered for a sporting event in Pennsylvania.

Drivers who have already listed their names with the speedway officials are Eddie Hearne, Clif Durant, Earl Cooper, Harlan Fengler, Frank Elliott, Bennett Hill, Jerry Wonderlick, W. F. White, Leon Duray, Harry Hartz, Tommy Milton, and Ralph DePalma. This group comprises all the foremost racers in the world.

Two hundred and twenty-five men, employes of the U. S. Pipe Line Co., are camped on the W. K. Hughes farm at Mitchell Creek. They are engaged in digging up the old oil pipe line which runs through that section, which has been sold by the company for more than it originally cost.

TIOGA TOPICS.

Harding Memorial Services Held—New Arrival in Editor's Family.

Tioga, Aug. 15.—M. C. Spencer, of Lambs Creek, spent Thursday with friends in town.

Robert A. Logan, of Johnstown, is a guest of his father, Alex Logan.

Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Clarendon have gone to Elmira to reside.

A daughter, Charlotte, was born to Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Graves on Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Miller, of Sayre, were Sunday guests of Dr. and Mrs. Wm. McCormack. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are leaving for their new home in Florida September 1.

Mrs. Anna Kentch is seriously ill.

Francis Leutner delightfully entertained several friends at her home on Park street, Friday evening.

Mrs. John Foster and son, Jack, of Keyport, N. J., are guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Peck.

Mrs. Eliza Dowling, of Montana, is the guest of her mother, Mrs. Mary Engler.

Dr. Wm. McCormack spent a few days this week at Blossburg as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Coe.

Special memorial services for the late President were held at the Methodist Episcopal church, Friday afternoon at four o'clock, in charge of Rev. F. B. McFreely, pastor of the Presbyterian church.

Lynn Drake, Scout Master at Washington, D. C., who is a guest of Mrs. Drake's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Damon Knuppenburg, gave a very interesting talk on "Chacteristics of President Harding." The audience was thus allowed a glimpse of the late President's life from one who had come in personal contact with him. Mr. Drake closed his remarks with a glowing tribute to Mr. Harding.

Ku Klux Klan at Elkland.

What is supposed to have been a Ku Klux Klan demonstration occurred on the hill just south of Elkland last Sunday night, the burning cross creating considerable excitement about the town. A great crowd of citizens gathered on the highway near the hill to witness the proceeding. None of the hooded band were seen, however.

Monday morning several people made a visit to the spot where the cross appeared and discovered that a heavy timber had been used for the upright, with a piece of iron pipe fastened across the top to complete the cross. The latter piece had been wound with burlap which had been saturated with gasoline and torch applied.

SERIOUS SITUATION ABROAD.

French Say British Note Is Disavowal of Allies.

The British government in the publication last week of its official correspondence with the Allies since June, placed on record its position on the German reparation problem.

Lord Curzon, secretary of foreign affairs, says an associated press dispatch, in an elaborate note dealing with all the manifold aspects of the problem, sets forth that the British government regards the occupation of the Ruhr as illegal and unauthorized by the Versailles treaty, thus supporting the German contention in this respect. At the same time, however, he offers to submit the point to arbitration at the Hague or by some other body.

While still adhering to a tone of the utmost of courtesy and saying nothing definite with regards to any separate action on the part of Great Britain, Lord Curzon emphasized that Great Britain cannot agree with the French policy, which he intimates plainly seems to point an indefinite occupation of the Ruhr.

Lord Curzon still leaves it to the French Government to suggest the method of selecting an international commission to examine into Germany's capacity to pay reparations, but he plainly declares that Great Britain cannot accept the decision of the matter, since that commission has become the mere instrument of Franco-Belgian policy.

Finally, Lord Curzon declares that the British government still adheres to the plan of former Premier Bonar Law, under which Great Britain would be satisfied to obtain from German reparations and allied debts to Great Britain a sum sufficient to meet Great Britain's obligations to the United States.

The British note remarks that "it is difficult to think in what way greater consideration could have been shown to the Franco-Belgian point of view." It then at great length outlines the British viewpoint, which Lord Curzon summarizes in part as follows:

"His majesty's government never contemplated and never does contemplate, that Germany should be relieved of all reparations payments. They are determined that Germany shall pay to the maximum of her capacity. What that maximum may be, should be decided by an impartial inquiry. It cannot be ascertained by casting up amounts Germany's creditors would like to receive.

"To ask more than Germany's capacity can only destroy assets which Germany would be able to offer the allies. To force liquidation is not the most profitable way of making recovery from a debtor with resources.

"It is admitted that Germany can make substantial payments if, by restoration of her finances and stabilization of her currency she secures a budget surplus available for reparations. Moreover this surplus must be in a form which can be made available for external payments over the foreign exchanges. External debts cannot be paid by the collection of depreciated paper marks.

"In the view of his majesty's government, forcible interference with the economic life of Germany, even if consistent with the treaty of Versailles, cannot assist in the necessary restoration. Not only will it prevent realization of any surplus for reparations, but by intensifying the disorder of German finance and currency, will have the gravest reactions on trade.

"His majesty's government therefore, regards as doomed to failure the method pursued by the French and Belgian governments to secure reparations. Despite the wholesome seizures, the occupation of the Ruhr has produced, at great cost, less receipts for the allies, notably of coal and coke, than were forthcoming the previous year. Moreover his majesty's government feels that the resulting situation involves a great and growing danger to the peaceful trade of the whole world, and not the least of that of Great Britain.

According to the terms of an associated press dispatch the British stand is regarded in French official circles as a positive disapproval of Great Britain's war allies and a Trank espousal of the German cause. It is thought Premier Poincare will reply in due time, although at the Quai D'Orsay it is held the document smacks so much of propaganda it might properly be ignored.

"This amazing document proposes to haul France and Belgium before a tribunal to answer for their efforts to make Germany carry out her treaty obligations," said an official of the foreign office. "France and Belgium are not ready to answer such a summons, even from Great Britain."

The same official, whose statements reflect the tense feeling aroused in the higher French circles, said the note obviously was intended to influence American opinion. He was curious to know, however, how the Americans would receive a document which made all settlements of the reparation question depend upon the payment of debts to the United States. throwing the responsibility for the in July, 1920, by the British as well European chaos on the United States, as the other allies, and by represen-

The most surprising feature of the note to the French government offers, it was said, was the statement that the occupation of the Ruhr was illegal.

"The legality of the occupation of the Ruhr or any other German territory the allies might choose was recognized in a document signed at Spa tatives of the German government," an official said.

HARRY E. WILLARD,
Of Delmar Township.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

FRED G. BROWN,
Of Wellsboro, Pa.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

JAMES CRAWFORD, Sr.,
Of Blossburg, Pa.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

HARRY C. MOORE,
Of Wellsboro, Pa.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Democratic voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

NATHAN NILES,
Of Richmond Township.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

RALPH B. BAITY,
Of Covington Township.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

FRANK E. REINWALD,
Of Gaines Township.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Democratic voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support and influence are earnestly solicited.

BEN REYNOLDS,
Of Chatham Township.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Commissioner, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

WILLIAM KIMBALL,
Of Tioga Borough.

I have decided to be a candidate for County Commissioner. I would like the office for just one term, if the people see fit to give it to me. I have served one term as County Commissioner and six years as Superintendent of The County Home. The expenses in the County Home during my six year term, I think, were less than half what they have been since and less than ever before. My term as Commissioner was a great saving to the taxpayers, if any one will take the pains to look it up. I worked for the county and not for myself. I will not make a canvass, but will be very thankful to the voters of Tioga county who see fit to vote for me.*

FOR REGISTER AND RECORDER

I hereby announce myself as a candidate for the office of Register and Recorder of Tioga County subject to the decision of the Republican voters at the Primary election, September 18, 1923.

In making this announcement, I desire to say to the voters of Tioga County that if I am elected for a third term, (four of my predecessors have been conceeded their third term as Register and Recorder), I will not be a candidate to succeed myself four years hence. WILLIAM S. WOODHOUSE.*

I hereby announce my candidacy for the nomination for Register and Recorder of Tioga County, subject to the decision of the Republican voters at the Primary election, September 18, 1923 and I respectfully solicit your support. MARY CUMMINGS.*

FOR PROTHONOTARY.
EDSON J. CATLIN,
Of Wellsboro, Pa.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of Prothonotary, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 18, 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited.*

FOR COUNTY TREASURER
BENJAMIN F. FLEITZ,
Of Mansfield, Pa.

I hereby announce my candidacy for the office of County Treasurer, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of Tioga county at the Primary Election, September 1923. Your support is earnestly solicited and will be appreciated.

ERNEST D. DAVIS,

HARDING LAID TO REST AT MARION AS WORLD MOURNS

Simple Services in the Home and Again in Cemetery Are Solemnized by Dead President's Hymns.

MRS. HARDING BEARS SELF WITH FORTITUDE

President Coolidge Heads the Funeral Line, With Justices of Supreme Court Following—Mass of Floral Tributes—Vast Multitude Massed Behind Little Cemetery Sees Close of Splendid, Sad Spectacle.

Marion, O.—Warren G. Harding's path to glory ended at a little vine covered vault set like an emerald jewel among the white headstones of the little cemetery at Marion. Here all that was mortal of the twenty-ninth President of the United States was laid to rest.

It was a day of splendid but mournful spectacle—a day that will forever abide in the memories of those who saw or took part in its events.

More than 60,000 persons composed the big throng that came to view the President in his casket in the house in Center street, where Dr. Harding, the father, has lived so many years. Thousands were still waiting in line when the coffin was closed at 1 o'clock.

When the last visitor had passed the bier the house was closed to all but members of the family, who assembled in the small room for a brief prayer service.

Then friends and others who had come from afar were admitted for the funeral services. The last hymns were sung and the last words of affection said. Then the cortege moved to the cemetery.

Funeral Procession

In accordance with Mrs. Harding's desire military and other uniformed orders were absent from the funeral procession proper. The honor guard of soldiers, sailors and marines marched ahead, with Captain Andrews, naval aide, and Major Baldinger, military aide, following the automobile in which rode the clergymen.

There was no military formality. Just the hearse and a short line of cars—a bare dozen. Two hundred employees of the Marion Star walked. That was all that marked the last earthly journey.

The order of the procession put the honorary pallbearers next behind the hearse. The first car for President Coolidge, Chief Justice and ex-President Taft, Speaker Gillett of the house of representatives and Secretary of State Hughes. Following them came three other cars, in which rode the other members of the cabinet, and then in a limousine with drawn curtains, Mrs. Harding, with George Christian and Dr. Sawyer.

Then the old father, his wife, the President's brother and his wife, the President's unmarried sister and his niece and nephew.

The other sisters, Mrs. Votaw and Mrs. Remsberg, with their husbands and the Remsberg children, were next, and in other cars were Mrs. Harding's brother and his wife and other relatives.

Mrs. Coolidge was assigned to the twelfth car, with Mrs. Hughes, Mrs. Weeks and Mrs. New. The other cabinet ladies and the members of the President's Alaskan party, including the correspondents who accompanied the expedition, were all in line.

Without a Drum Beat or Music

Through the cleared streets, bounded by the densest throng that could find places on the sidewalks, the procession moved without drum beat or music of any kind.

The people who had filed past the coffin had moved toward the cemetery and taken their positions; those who had been unable to get to the house in time followed close behind, and all the downtown crowd that had watched the transit of President Coolidge swelled the throng.

There were flowers everywhere, from a cross 12 feet high, with a kneeling female figure at its base—Columbia mourning for her great son—to the simple messages that every child and many grownups carried to cast on the dead President's path.

A volume could be written of the progress of that procession through the silent multitude, but it is driven out of the narrative by the scenes that followed.

Soldiers had ropes on all sides of the section of the cemetery in which the vault is situated, and kept the space inside clear until the funeral procession had arrived and halted.

These ropes were not barriers for all. General Pershing came in early, followed shortly by Thomas A. Edison, Henry Ford and Harvey Firestone and their wives. They stood or sat on camp stools to the right of the vault, talking together, all old friends of Harding. That was the picture for a few moments.

The mortuary was flanked by pillars of white, laurel wreathed and eagle crowned, and all about it were flowers, wreaths and shields, anchors, crosses, allegorical pieces, sprays—every form that the florist's art has devised to typify sympathy and appreciation; there was even a map of Australia [illegible] bearing a legend, "Australia Mourns With America." They came from individuals, fraternal organizations, cities, states and foreign potentates. Four huge army trucks were burdened like hay wagons with the fragrant freight of remembrance.

Minute Gun Boomed

Then the minute gun boomed out, distant fortunately for the spirit of the occasion, and the funeral party came on. First were the clergymen, led by Bishop Anderson, who used to be a member of the camping parties on which Harding went with Edison, Ford and Firestone. The ministers of the church the Hardings attended in Marion followed.

Then came the coffin, borne by the soldiers, sailors and marines, flanked by the military dignitaries and by the aides of the dead President, Major Baldinger and Captain Andrews. President Coolidge, with Chief Justice Taft and Speaker Gillett, the executive, judicial and legislative heads of the government, with the cabinet officers who were the honorary pallbearers, ranged themselves on the right of the open door of the vault.

On the other side came Mrs. Harding, veiled and almost hidden by the others, but erect. Secretary Christian stood beside her. On her other side were Dr. Sawyer and Lieutenant Colonel Sherrill, chief aide at the White House. Close behind Mrs. Harding stood Mrs. Coolidge, and grouped about them were Dr. Harding, the President's father, looking very old and frail; his wife and the dead President's brother and sisters and their families.

Gradually the others filed in and took their allotted places. Official dignitaries and old Marion friends were about equal in numbers in the group about the tomb.

All Star Workers There

Governors and ex-Governors—among them Donahey of Ohio and Pinchot of Pennsylvania, ex-Governor Durbin of Indiana; a swarm of senators—Wadsworth, Edge, Cameron, Warren, Hale, Spencer, Shipstead, Willis, Sheppard, Phipps and Cummins, the latter by virtue of his presidency of the senate, one of the chief mourners.

Ex-Senator Atlee Pomerene, who was Harding's colleague from Ohio when they were both in the senate, was another well-known figure, while in the obscurity of innumerable notables were railroad presidents and merchant princes—Frank Stearns of Boston and Julius Rosenwald of Chicago among them.

Then there were political chiefs like Chairman Adams of the Republican National Committee, National Committeeman William Butler of Massachusetts and R. D. Creager, state chairman from Texas, another of Harding's oldest personal and political friends, and an old sergeant, Mike Donaldson, whose war record had won Harding's admiration.

There were uncountable other eminent people, delegations of mayors, aldermen, Chambers of Commerce; these columns are not long enough to list a tithe of them. It takes longer to tell about their assembling than it did to group them, and at 2:45 o'clock in the afternoon the actual services began.

Before that another group of mourners, another aristocracy of grief, had taken its place, the whole force of the Marion Star, printers, stereotypers and pressmen were given places of honor.

With no preliminary, the voices of the choir, standing to the left and a little back of the tomb, broke a perfect stillness. "Lead, Kindly Light" was the hymn. The veiled figure beside the coffin moved a trifle. A hand clutching a handkerchief could be seen behind the veil. George Christian, beside her, had put his to his face long before.

The song died away and the Rev. George M. Landis of Trinity Baptist Church read from the Scriptures: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." The slight veiled figure swayed, but immediately straightened, and through the veil her lips could be seen to move as the minister read the stately words of the Scripture lesson.

The Prayer

Then came the prayer, a simple prayer asking comfort for the widow and thanking God for the services the dead man has been able to give to his country.

It was uttered by Dr. Jesse Swank of the Methodist Episcopalian Church and Mrs. Harding's pastor.

The prayer over, there was another hymn—"Nearer, My God, to Thee"—the briefest benediction by Bishop Anderson—"And now unto Him"—and then into the foreground stepped a soldier, bugle to lips. As "Taps" rang out the bearers pushed the President's body into the flower cumbered doorway.

A moment to arrange it there, with flowers all about and Mrs. Harding and George Christian followed it into the tomb. She was there only a moment, it seemed. President Coolidge and Mrs. Coolidge followed and that was all.

Mrs. Harding, still unbowed, walked to her car with Christian and Dr. Sawyer and were driven away. Mr. Coolidge and his important functionaries departed for their train and the crowd drifted away.

The Dominant Features

The flowers and the silence were the dominant features of the President's funeral; it did not seem to be as much broken as emphasized by the tolling of distant church bells, from the moment the cortege started up Center street to the Presidential salute and the funeral volley that marked the closing of the vault where Warren Harding is to rest until the mausoleum that is to be his final monument is erected.

SOLDIERS GUARD TOMB AT MARION

Marion, O.—The smoke from an army field camp was wafted on the funeral evening through Marion Cemetery, the resting place of President Harding.

A detachment of regular army troops now stationed there will guard the vault for six months, as required by law, and perhaps longer.

In the case of McKinley regular troops were on duty about his tomb for nearly two years to prevent souvenir hunters and other vandals from disturbing the sleep of the dead.

Forest Maps

Of the 181,799,997 acres included within the boundaries of the national forests, 20 per cent is accurately mapped and 50 per cent has been covered by rough reconnaissance, says the annual report of the forest service, United States Department of Agriculture. On about 24 per cent no mapping work has been done.

Floral Tributes From Everywhere

Small portion of loving remembrances contributed by friends of their fallen chief as they were being carried into Doctor Harding's home, where the body lay in state.

PRESIDENT IN TEARS AT TOMB

Face Twitching, He Wipes His Eyes Unashamed as Pastor Delivers Panygeric.

HE BIDS ADIEU IN VAULT

Mrs. Coolidge, Holding Back Her Tears, Consoles Noble Widow, Parting With Dead.

Marion, O.—President Calvin Coolidge paid his last tribute to his fallen chief and friend, and then from the little Marion cemetery the new executive immediately started back on his special train to the nation's capital to take up the reins of government dropped from the stilled hands of Warren Gamaliel Harding.

As the brief, simple rites were said before the vault in which the body will lie until a suitable mausoleum is provided, President Coolidge stood at the head of the casket, former President Taft at his left and members of the cabinet just behind. The President held his mourning-encircled hat and black gloves in his left hand over his heart.

President Coolidge's special arrived at Marion at 1:30 p. m. after an all-night run. A great throng at the station was held back by Ohio National Guardsmen, who lined the platform at intervals of about twenty paces.

Comptroller of the Currency D. R. Crissinger, who was chairman of the Town Committee that met all delegations and escorted them to the famous front porch during the 1920 campaign, and Major J. F. Prendergast met the train. They entered the President's car and remained with him fifteen minutes. The curtains were drawn.

Last Look at Face

The cabinet, which had accompanied Mrs. Harding to Marion with the body, came to the station and waited on the platform until the President and Mrs. Coolidge left their car.

The official party drove directly to the home of Dr. George T. Harding, Sr., the dead President's father, arriving at 1:45, and passing through a file of soldiers, at attention, entered the room in which the body lay in state to take a last loving look upon the face of the departed leader.

Mrs. Harding came into the room and, bearing up with a fortitude at which the nation marveled, greeted the distinguished mourners and in turn received their tender words of comfort and sympathy.

President and Mrs. Coolidge were the first to follow the casket from the house and took their places in the procession immediately behind the somber gray hearse.

Over the mile-long course to the cemetery the new President received many cordial though silent greetings, and women bowed their heads and a tear-stained handkerchief was waved here and there. The President, looking slowly to the right and left, made acknowledgment only with a kindly look.

Guns Boom Salute

In the cemetery, the Coolidge car drew to one side as that bearing Mrs. Harding came alongside and waited until the aged, grief stricken father could be escorted up to the front. The new executive and Chief Justice Taft, a President of another day, led the procession down the short path followed by Mrs. Harding, who had been joined by Mrs. Coolidge. Cannon in the distance boomed the Presidential salute of 21 guns.

Mrs. Coolidge stood at Mrs. Harding's right throughout the services before the vault. Fearing to give way to her own emotions lest it add to the strain of the little wan woman beside her, whose bravery and courage for the week since her lover and helpmeet of 30 years was taken from her in a flash, the new First Lady forced back her tears, laying a hand tenderly upon the arm of her sister to whom her heart went out.

Bid Him Godspeed

The people of Marion, who had buried their illustrious dead, turned to the station to give the same measure of allegiance and loyalty to the new President, as they poured upon their own neighbor two and a half years ago, when they sent him down to Washington in the country's cause.

On the way to Marion the special train passed into Ohio at dawn, the home folks of the lamented President turned aside in their grief for a moment to respectfully greet their new chief magistrate, come among them to join in their homage to Warren Harding the man.

George B. Christian, Jr.

The late president's secretary proved his loyalty to his fallen chief by befriending Mrs. Harding in every way possible.

Notables of Nation Mourn

Secretary of State Hughes, Chief Justice Taft, Secretary Weeks and Governor Donahey of Ohio arrive.

Crowds Waiting to View Funeral Cortege

CRITICAL SITUATION.

British People Do Not In General Realize the Condition.

According to an associated press dispatch Great Britain and France stand even further apart in their attitudes toward Germany than the British people and probably the world at large have understood. This seems to be the conclusion which must be drawn from the explanation Prime Minister Baldwin and Lord Curzon, the foreign secretary, gave the two houses of parliament of the position resulting from the latest British attempt to lay the foundations of a united policy.

The minister revealed that the latest communications from France and Belgium furnished no material for an Allied answer to the German reparation proposals and they brought to light a surprising deadlock in the correspondence. Neither the French nor the Belgium reply, they stated, even mentioned the draft note to Germany which Great Britain had submitted to the two Allied governments. Apparently the French and Belgian communications were limited to replying to Great Britain's covering note, sent with the draft, or dealt only in generalities.

The British spokesmen acknowledged the cordial spirit in which the Allies had worded their communications. The ministers laid emphasis upon the fact that Italy had expressed general agreement with the British position. But they indicated clearly that they saw no hope for joint action and they pointed out directly that while the Allies were exchanging views with unabated friendliness the European situation might sink into "irretrievable ruin."

The British government proposes to publish its own share of the correspondence and is asking Belgium and France for permission to publish their replies. This publication, it was indicated, will constitute an appeal to the public opinion of the world. Whether France will wish to be a party to that proposal remains to be seen.

GASOLINE WAR IN WEST.

Sweeping Reduction Made By Standard Oil Company.

If the "gasoline war" which obtains in several western States, reaches Pennsylvania, it not without the realm of reason to believe that even in Wellsboro it may be possible to buy ten gallons for the price we are now obliged to pay for about half that quantity.

A reduction to sixteen cents per gallon was announced last Saturday for South Dakota by the Standard Oil Company as a result of an order of Governor W. H. McMaster of South Dakota on August 7, to the highway supply depot operated by the State at Mitchell, S. D., to sell gasoline at 16 cents a gallon.

In a formal statement Governor McMaster said that at a conference with Standard Oil officials in Chicago he demanded a five cent reduction in the price of gasoline at filling stations in South Dakota.

"They said they would lose money," said the Governor's statement. "My answer to the Standard Oil Company is 'sixteen cent gasoline for South Dakota.' I am calling upon surrounding States to join the fight, which will be waged to the bitter end."

INTERNAL LOAN FOR GERMANY

Plan With Dollar Standard Trillions of Paper Marks Would Be Retired.

Germany is considering a plan to introduce the dollar as a new circulation medium by means of an internal gold loan which would be both an investment and also provide a medium of payment. This would have the double purpose of creating a foundation on which, it is believed, Germany might be able gradually to return to a gold basis, and also call in trillions of paper marks, thus making it possible to suspend the money press.

The plan calls for the issue immediately of a new internal loan of 100,000,000 gold marks, approximately $25,000,000. This loan to be issued in dollars, bear interest, be guaranteed by special taxes and be legal currency or medium of payment.

To induce popular subscriptions, two features are planned. Loan certificates as small as $5 will be issued, and though issued as dollars, can be subscribed for in paper marks at the rate of exchange on the day of subscribing. Expressed in paper marks, the loan would reach 25,000,000,000,000.

The government appears to hope that the dollar-loan certificates with these features will be such a lure that vast bales of paper marks will flow in, making it possible to cease printing at least for some weeks.

HINT TO ADVERTISERS.

Analyzing Causes of Advertising Failures as Poor Copy Writers.

In "Advertising for the Retailer," a text book on publicity, the author, a noted writer, analyzes the cause of advertising failures, noting as one important cause the delegation to incompetent hands by the merchant the preparation of copy.

If the man who undertakes to deliver the retailer's message does not thoroughly grasp the importance of his task he "does it in the quickest way possible, and a result is copy of the announcement type."

"Copy of the announcement type"—that is, copy which confines itself to worthless generalities, instead of presenting interesting and helpful information about the goods or services offered—gets nowhere. And that is one reason why newspaper advertising offers such tremendous advantage over those forms of publicity whose physical limitations confine the advertiser to brief messages of the "announcement type."

If there are reasons why the consumer will profit by use of your wares don't hesitate to divulge them in the newspapers. If there are no such reasons, better hang up your shutters and save the expense of trying to do business.

RECORD OF PA. RAILROADS.

Only 225 Killed In Past Nine Years—Some By Their Own Negligence.

Seventy-one passenger carrying steam railroads in Pennsylvania killed 225 persons classified as passengers in the nine years from July 1, 1914 to July 1, 1923, the bureau of accidents of the public service commission announced. The bureau said the number killed, compared with the millions of passengers transported, "reflects to a remarkable degree the safety with which the railroads are operated."

Of the persons killed, seventy-six were fatally injured by jumping on or off moving trains; fifty-seven lost their lives while waiting for trains at station platforms, and eighty met their deaths in train accidents.

Europe Now Wants Not Judicial Intervention but Partisan Intervention

By REPRESENTATIVE T. E. BURTON, of Ohio.

AM I an optimist in world politics? No—and yes. I am sure many grave difficulties must be overcome before we can have international confidence and peace. Europe is in a deplorable condition. Doubtless it yearns for a settled political and social order as ardently as any people can; doubtless its public thought and purpose are moving on as high a plane as the circumstances make possible, but it is full of trouble, and its every path toward general accommodation seems blocked. Its diversities are indescribable, its suspicions obstinate, its antipathies almost fathomless. One scarcely can descry a clear European horizon; in every direction are massed clouds and ceaseless lightning play.

Think of Europe's innumerable and fixed segregations. Physically and psychologically it has memories of nothing but segregation. Mountains, rivers and seas fight against peace in Europe. They keep peoples apart. They perpetuate hatreds. In their work of prolonging human division they are aided by differing degrees of civilization, by antagonistic racial impulses, by discordant religions and by a babel of tongues. Add to these physical and mental barriers and disparities the numberless intractabilities common to all human nature and you have a problem that well may dishearten the most hopeful and resolute of statesmen.

But the situation cannot rest here. Humanity must advance. Evolution will not be denied. Intellectual and moral forces are gathering strength, peoples are traveling, frontiers are wearing down, education is spreading, international understanding, though slow-paced, is on the march.

Europe just now does not want judicial intervention; it wants partisan intervention. Each of the giant protagonists looks to us, not for disinterested guidance, but for helpful sympathy with itself. We cannot take sides among these contestants. It would be necessary for us to oppose somebody, and whomsoever we opposed we should offend. In all likelihood we merely should add another element to the welter of jarring judgments and embittered emotions. Possibly the conditions will change and offer us an opening for useful mediation or aid. Our most responsible public men at Washington are on the bridge, so to speak, for such a sign.

Change in Relation of Woman to the Social and Political Organization

By PRESIDENT HARDING, in Helena Address.

THEN came the war, and all at once even the most dubious among us realized that the women, everywhere, constituted the first line of industrial reserves upon which society must fall back in its great crisis. . . . Not as a boon, but as a duty, full partnership in the conduct of political affairs was conferred upon them.

All this has inevitably wrought a profound change in the relation of woman to the social and political organization. We may approve it or disapprove it, we may view it with satisfaction or with misgiving, but the fact is before us that woman has taken a new place in the community. And just as her participation in the industrial sphere expands, so her relations to the home and its interest is necessarily contracted. . . .

Frankly I am one of those old-fashioned people who would be glad if the way could be found to maintain the traditional relations of father, mother, children, and home. But very plainly these relations are in process of a great modification. The most we can do, to the utmost possible extent, is to readapt our conditions of industry and of living so as to enable the mothers to make the most of their lessened opportunity for shaping the lives and minds of their children. We must hope, and we must make it possible, that mothers will not assume, when their babes of yesterday become the schoolboys and schoolgirls of today, that the responsibility of the mother is ended, and that the teacher, the school authorities, the college, the state, will henceforth assume it.

Rather, we must recognize that no other influence can possibly be substituted for that of motherhood; and we must make it possible for the mothers to co-operate with these social institutions of the new order, to give the children as far as possible the privileges of a home atmosphere which will supplement the advantages of here education and training. . . . In short, the mothers must be placed in such position that despite their obligations outside the home they shall not have to surrender their domestic responsibility.

The Immense Popularity of Motor Camping Is Very Easy to Understand

By J. C. and JOHN D. LONG, in "Motor Camping."

MOST of us are possessed of the desire to be somewhere else. Since the dawn of history hordes of men have pressed into new countries. Sometimes the expeditions have been in search of food and plunder, but mixed in with these motives has been the human passion for something better, the hope for sunnier scenes lying over the horizon.

Hemmed in by the restrictions of modern business life, people no longer, even in this Western World, move by tribes or companies into new homelands. But the restlessness remains.

In the United States a new and increasing way of satisfying this desire for recreation and adventure has swept over the country. Motor camping has become a leading national pastime. Thousands play golf every year, tens of thousands play tennis, hundreds of thousands engage in baseball, but in the past few years millions have gone in for motor camping. There are over ten million cars in this country.

The immense popularity of motor camping is very easy to understand when one realizes that this pastime is romantic, healthful, educative and at the same time economical. Father can take the whole family for a two weeks' or a month's trip in his car at virtually the same cost as staying at home. The room rent he will have to pay on his trip will range from nothing to fifty cents or a dollar a day for the family. There are many thousands of acres of free camping grounds in the national and state public playgrounds.

It Is Far Better for Man to Marry Good Blood Than Good Environment

By PROF. H. E. WALTER, Brown University.

There are three contributing factors that go to make up any man—or woman—and no one of the three can possibly be omitted. The first is environment or the surroundings in which a person is brought up. It represents the opportunity or chance in life which one has. The second is natural capacity which is inherited from one's forebears. This is heredity or endowment. The third factor is the response which is made with a given inheritance, whatever it may be, within one's particular surroundings. Environment is the stage setting, inheritance the actor and the response what the actor performs upon the stage.

To reduce the matter to the simplest terms, the three fateful factors that determine a man—namely, environment, heredity and response—may each occur in at least three varying grades, indicated roughly as good, medium and poor. By combining these factors we arrive at twenty-seven kinds of men.

It is far better for men to marry good blood than good environment, because natural capacity usually leads, sooner or later, to an effective response which is likely in the end to insure a desirable environment.

New Jewett Six Wins Famous Hill Climbs

Easily Captures Honors at Albany and Syracuse Over Far More Costly Cars

AT Albany, N. Y., July 21 on the famous New Salem hill—and at Syracuse July 28, on the Brinkerhoff Hill, Jewett Sixes won everything in sight in the annual hill climbing events.

At Albany—87 cars competing, grouped in price classes—Jewett finished first, second, third, fourth and fifth—making the best time in ALL classes—except for second in the free-for-all (where the Paige-built Jewett was beaten by the Paige). Jewett's best time was 1.19 2-5. All Jewetts entered were owners' cars. The third Jewett in its class event was driven by Miss Trumbell; time, 1.34 3-5.

At Syracuse—against 37 cars, some much higher in price, and many specially designed for hill climbing—Jewett Six, with standard wheel-base and gear ratio, won its piston displacement class event—also finished first in the free-for-all!

Jewett climbed the 1.4 mile Brinkerhoff hill, which has a 489.5 foot elevation from the start to the tape, in 1.31 3-5—a new hill record, defeating many famous specially-built hill climbing cars and celebrated racing drivers. It won every event in which it was entered—made the best time made by any car in the entire contest!

These two notable successes but continue the nation-wide hill climbing successes made consistently by Jewett since its first appearance. "Try to pass it on a hill"—a Jewett Six slogan—has meaty significance!

The NEW JEWETT SIX with 12 major improvements and 41 refinements, at no increase in price still costs you only $1065 factory. It dominates the thousand dollar class in easy handling, comfort, dependability, long life and value as well as in performance!

Come in and we'll let you put a new Jewett Six through its paces. [615-A]

BOGUS 'ANTIQUES' FLOOD AMERICA, PARISIAN SAYS

New York Museum and Louvre Are Victims, He Asserts.

Paris.—America is heavily loaded with bogus "antiques" and the Louvre in Paris and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York have been buying spurious pieces for years, Jean Vigouroux told the court at the opening of his trial on charges of diverting funds and art treasures, filed by the Parisian antiquarian, George Joseph DeMotte, whose New York branch was formerly managed by Vigouroux.

The specific charges against Vigouroux are based on the alleged diversion of $7,000 of the branch's funds and the disappearance of Persian manuscripts valued at 1,000,000 francs, later recovered by M. DeMotte. Vigouroux was arrested when he returned to France, as he claimed, to obtain justice.

Vigouroux denied any wrongdoing, offered explanations of the alleged irregularities and turned the trial into a public denunciation of DeMotte as "the world's greatest antique faker." His diatribes at times became so violent that the presiding judge in the Twelfth Correctional court, where the trial is being held, threatened to have him removed from the room if he did not restrain himself.

"For twenty years the Louvre museum has been buying bogus antiques," Vigouroux testified. He declared the directors of the Metropolitan museum in New York had bought 3,000,000 francs' worth of spurious art objects.

New Anaesthetic Is Used With Success

Prof. K. Gauss of Freiberg, who has discovered a new anaesthetic which he has employed successfully in 500 operations. It is known as narcylene, and is composed of two gases, purified acetylene and oxygen with the addition of oil of pine to do away with the objectionable odor of the acetylene.

Children Die in Barn Fire.

Four children, all less than four years old, were burned to death in a fire which destroyed the hay barn of Woodrow Williamson near Denver. They are thought to have started the fire while playing with matches and when flames burst forth.

TOO MUCH DELAY

Naval Captain's Odd Warning to Expert Gunner.

Evidently Fine Marksmanship Was Not Considered Essential in the Days of the Old Navy.

The one thing a commander of a vessel engaged in target practice is more interested in than anything else is the record that his men can make at the ranges. But there was a time when the "man behind the gun" was not recognized as the most important element in the efficiency of a fighting ship.

To illustrate this an old-timer told this story in Washington not long ago:

"I was a junior officer on the old Essex many years ago. In those days we had target practice once a quarter. We were forced by regulations to expend so many rounds of ammunition every three months, and—well, that was about all there was to it. It was a perfunctory kind of practice, and every one was glad when it was over.

"One day we went out for the quarterly practice, anchored the target, and went at it. The targets we used in those days were planks fastened in a triangle, a spar placed in the center to hold the canvas, which was the target proper.

"Now, the gun captain of the forward pivot rifle was an excellent marksman, and on his first trial he sent a shell through the spar, which smashed it into flinders. That, of course, stopped the practice, and out went a boat to tow the wrecked target alongside for repairs.

"When it had been patched up, it was towed back to its place, and firing was resumed.

"Again the same gunner had the first shot, and again his shell brought down the spar and canvas.

"The boat was sent out again, but when the required target was being towed back to the range, the captain, who was much out of humor by the delay, spoke his mind:

"'Tell Gunner Blank,' he commanded, 'that if he hits that target again, I will put him in the brig!'"

Woman Sets New Mark 16,300 Feet Up in Air

St. Louis, Mo.—Mrs. Bertha Horchem, professional aviatrix, of Ransom, Kans., established a new altitude record for women by ascending 16,300 feet in an airplane at St. Louis Aviation field. The previous record was 15,700 feet and was made by Andre E. Peyre, French woman flyer, in California last May.

The flight was official, being held under regulations of the National Aeronautical association.

Mrs. Horchem was in the air two hours and eight minutes. When she descended she had to be lifted from the cockpit, her hands and feet being frost-bitten, despite her winter clothes.

Maj. William R. Robertson, commander of the Missouri National Guard Air Service, accompanied Mrs. Horchem on the flight.

Carried It Too Far.

Some one asked Professor Steinach of Vienna, whose rejuvenation experiments are widely known, if there wasn't considerable danger in the process. "Of course the thing can be overdone," he replied with a smile. "I am told that a woman met a friend of hers on the street wheeling a perambulator in which sat a chubby infant. 'I did not know you had a baby,' said the first woman in surprise. 'I haven't,' replied the other despondently. 'This is my husband—he has been to Doctor Steinach.'"—Boston Transcript.

Moth Investigation.

Work on the biology of clothes moths as affecting the brush and fabric industries has been one branch of the investigations of the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture. Valuable information has been obtained. An additional service in this field has been the co-operation with the army and navy by furnishing information regarding the susceptibility of various fabrics to moth attack.

Nothing to It, Brother!

That old tradition dies hard. The Pittsburgh Post thinks that Boston infants repeat the Coue formula in this manner: "Every day in divers and sundry particulars I show a progressive increment of amelioration."—Boston Transcript.

BERGDOLL KILLS MAN.

Greatest "Slaker" of All Time Again In the Public Print.

Grover Cleveland Bergdoll, notorious slacker, is again in the lime light this time in Germany whither he fled after a sensational escape from the U. S. authorities shortly after the beginning of the World War.

According to an associated press dispatch Bergdoll shot down and killed one man and seriously wounded another last Friday night in his apartment at Eberbach, Baden, when the men seized him in an alleged kidnapping attempt.

Two other men, waiting outside in an old American army automobile with an American shield on the side, were arrested after being menaced by a crowd. The German authorities said one was an American army lieutenant and the other a Russian prince.

Both of Berdoll's assailants were identified as Frenchmen in the service of the Americans. Bergdoll said the men seized him, but that he succeeded in breaking free and then drew a revolver and fired.

War Department officials at Washington, while expressing interest in the affair deny that the department or any of its representatives had any thing to do with the attempted seizure of the draft dodger. There was no significance in the fact that an old army car was used by the would-be kidnappers, they added, as there are many of those cars in Germany and France.

It was reported some weeks ago that "Ma" Bergdoll, mother of the notorious slacker, was endeavoring to persuade her son to come back to her United States and serve his time in order that the family might sue for the return of Bergdoll's great fortune which is in the hands of the alien property custodian. Her plans however, did not materialize.

Horses Feed On Airplane.

On a recent evening aviator R. Haines, of Lancaster, Pa., with his wife and mechanician, J. Behmer, sailed into Bellefonte in a L. W. F. plane, from Lewiston where he had been giving exhibitions. The party landed on the aviation field and, as they intended spending the night there, manager Gelhaus suggested that he run his plane into the hangar as a better means of protection; especially as the aviation field is pastured at night by the Hon. Thomas Beaver's horses and cattle. Mr. Haines, however, declined to accept the suggestion, stating that there was nothing about the plane that the animals were likely to damage.

Along about midnight Joseph Alters, the night watchman at the hangars, heard considerable of a commotion down at Mr. Haines' airplane and went forth to investigate. Imagine his consternation when he found the horses literally making a meal of the tail of the plane. There was evidently something in the glue used to paste the linen covering on the plane that appealed to the appetite of the horses as they were stripping the linen off of the stabilizer and elevator by big mouthfuls and chewing it to a pulp. Two holes had also been chewed in the covering of the wings. Mr. Alters was compelled to camp at the plane for the balance of the night to keep the horses from doing further damage. As it was Mr. Haines and party were compelled to stay in Bellefonte until he could repair the damage done.

Criticism Hurt Harding.

The late President Harding was greatly hurt by adverse and unjust criticism heaped upon him as the nation's chief executive, Myron T. Herrick, American Ambassador to France declared Saturday on his arrival on the Paris for a month's vacation.

"The presidency," he said, "has become an impossible position. Not even a strong man physically can stay on the job to the finish. The strain of the office and the terrible criticisms which are heaped upon a President will break down the official and this undoubtedly happened in the case of Mr. Harding.

"I could see very clearly that he was greatly hurt by these adverse and unjust criticisms. I know his nature and I know how silently he endured these things."

FARM BUREAU NOTES.

Farmers' Picnic August 24th—Program of Sports Prepared.

The date for the annual farmers' picnic has been changed from August 23 to August 24. This change was made because of being unable to secure a speaker wanted for the occasion on the 23rd. Mr. Rush Lewis, commonly known as the "Billy Sunday of the Dairymens' League," will be the principal speaker. He is a very capable speaker and his talk will be entertaining as well as educational. Dairymen will profit by hearing Mr. Lewis.

A new feature in the sport line will be a spirited contest in barnyard golf. It is planned to have regular teams selected before the day of the picnic to take part in the contest. A baseball game along with a number of minor sports will be on the program. The silver loving cup which was won by the western side of the county last year will be contested for again this year.

Poultry Meetings.

Mr. Donald Gray assisted the county agent in conducting a series of poultry culling demonstrationes about the county. These meetings were well attended and great interest was shown in this important industry. A marked increase in enthusiasm was apparent at these meetings.

Tobacco Growers Plan Field Day.

The tobacco growers of Tioga county will meet on the farm of Harry Smith on August 22 for the purpose of looking over the experimental plots and listening to talks by men who are well posted in the art of growing, grading and marketing. Mr. Otto Olson, who is in charge of the experimental work in tobacco in Pennsylvania and Prof. Gardner, head of the aronomy department of State College will be two of the speakers.

Holstein Exhibition at Dairy Show.

A number of the leading Holstein breeders in this county have expressed the desire to send a carload of Holsteins to the National Dairy Show at Syracuse this fall. A partial examination has been made of possible entries to this show and a further selection will be made in the near future.

This is the largest dairy show in the United States and possibly in the world. Tioga county dairymen will profit by taking advantage of the show this year as it may never again be held so near to our own county.

RECORD CLASSES GRADUATE.

Large Number Finish Work at State College and Normal Schools.

Forty-six hundred teachers were graduated from teacher training institutions in Pennsylvania during the year which just closed, according to data gathered by the Department of Public Instruction.

Figures from the forty-seven accredited colleges in the State show that the total number of graduates was more than seven thousand, the largest in the history of the State. Among these graduates were E. G. Gushee, sixty-three years old, of Philadelphia, and Mrs. S. Shoemaker Farley, age fifty-seven, of Swarthmore, who received the Bachelor of Science Degree from Temple University and State College respectively.

Of the seven thousand graduates, nineteen hundred took educational courses and will enter the teaching profession.

The normal schools, too, established high water mark in the number of graduates, twenty-six hundred-eighteen having received diplomas in June. These figures include the largest number of male graduates since the establishment of normal schools in 1859. Cheyney Normal School, organized two years ago, graduated twenty-one.

Record classes, also, prevailed in the field of secondary education, thirty-one thousand having finished in the first class high schools of the State. This large number is attributed to the influence of junior high schools. These have had a phenomenal development in Pennsylvania, the past few years, and have had the effect of holding students in high school until the completion of the course.

It is estimated that 30 per cent of the high school graduates will enter higher institutions of learning in the fall.

—D. W. Bonear and Mrs. Erma Fingar, both of Knoxville, were married August 7 at the home of the bride's parents by Rev. Harold H. Charlesworth, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church.

ATTENTION HOUSEWIVES.

First Lady of Land Caters to Husband's Taste.

The more intimate and personal side of our new President is now being exploited by the news writers, even his taste in matters culinary receiving attention, as witness the following from a Washington news service writer:

"Calvin Coolidge has his aunt Mary just as William Howard Taft had his aunt Delia. Aunt Delia became famous because her nephew, Willie, thought she made the best apple pies in the land. Aunt Mary's nephew, Cal, thinks her mayonnaise is the best ever; and so aunt Mary, (whose name is Mrs. John Hazel and who lives in Boston), bids fair to usurp the culinary honors of Taft's old aunt. As the ex-President loves apple pies, so the new President loves mayonnaise. And that's why Anthony Giacofei cannot sleep of nights.

Anthony is the President's own chef at the Willard Hotel. Every day Coolidge orders salad for luncheon, and every day Anthony puts muscle and prayers into the preparation of its dressings. He moans:

"'I beat it and beat it and I pray ze good God' to make it be nice, but ze President he say his aunt Mary make it better. Zat aunt Mary, he must be vera good cook.'

"Here is aunt Mary's receipe. The President and his wife recommend it highly.

"'Cream one cup of butter very lightly. Stir smoothly together the yolks of four eggs, one tablespoonful of mustard and one teaspoonful of salt. Add very slowly one cup of olive oil, and half a cup of lemon juice and vinegar, pouring first the oil, then the lemon and venigar. Or use all lemon juice and no vinegar.'

"Aunt Mary gave Mrs. Coolidge that receipe, but the first lady never quite caught the knack of mixing. Mayonnaise and cream of tartar biscuits are the only things she cannot make to perfection, according to the President, who longs for biscuits with his breakfast.

"He is very fond too of cereal—so fond of it that the United States Department of Agriculture is seeking to provide him with a brand new sort."

COOLIDGE IN WHITE HOUSE.

Finds New Office There as Prepared by Late President.

President Coolidge took up his official duties for the first time last Monday at the executive offices in the White House. He will maintain his residence at the New Willard hotel, however, until Mrs. Harding has finished her preparatins for vacating the White House.

Ever since President Harding left on his ill-fated Western trip in June, carpenters and painters had been busy laying new floors and redecorating and although the remodeling has not been entirely completed, the entrance of the new Executive on his duties found the executive offices looking fresher than they had in years.

The first caller to enter President Coolidge's office was Frank W. Stearns, of Boston, his close friend, who has been with him almost continuously since he was elevated to the Presidency.

STATE POLICE ARREST 72.

Figures for Last Week Include One Woman.

Prohibition enforcement activities of State Police last week resulted in the arrest of 72 persons, one a woman. Twenty automobiles and three trucks were seized, among them an enclosed car containing 108 quarts of whiskey. It was driven by the woman who was arrested.

The arrests include 46 classed as bootleggers, 15 as moonshiners, nine hotel men and truckers and two brewers. Seizures include 18 stills, 1500 gallons of mash, 495 gallons of alcohol, 256 gallons of wine, 351 quarts of whiskey, 89 gallons of moonshine, 128 quarts of champagne, 52 gallons of cider, 335 barrels, 20 cases and 55 bottles of beer.

Lewis Rising, aged fifty-three years, died in the Bath Hospital at 12 o'clock last Friday night from a fractured skull sustained when struck at 9:10 o'clock Friday night by an eastbound Lackawanna passenger train at the Bath station. Mr. Rising had been employed as baggageman at the Lackawanna depot there for the past nine years. He was found lying by the side of the tracks covered with blood shortly after the train had pulled out.

FORD WORLD'S RICHEST MAN.

Celebrates 60th Birthday—Poor 20 Years Ago.

According to a Detroit dispatch Henry Ford celebrated his 60th birthday recently.

Twenty years ago, on his fortieth birthday, he was a poor man. He had just quit a job with the Detroit Edison Company, where he had worked for seven years, to organize the Ford Motor Company.

While he was working as a master mechanic, in the Edison Electric Power Plant, carrying his dinner pail to work and drawing a salary of $125 a month, Ford was spending his nights and holidays working on his "horseless carriage."

Today he is the world's richest man, with a personal fortune of $750-000,000 and head of the world's largest automobile industry capitalized at $100,000,000. Ford acknowledges that had it not been for the devotion and faith of his wife, he could not have succeeded.

Ford was born on a farm in Greenfield, Michigan.

Bear Bites Holes in Tire.

A Buffalo man, motoring near Kane the other day, says that as he rounded a curve he saw a big bear 100 feet ahead at a point where high banks bordered the road for a considerable distance. He speeded up the car and started in pursuit of the fleeing bear. He soon caught up with it and struck the animal. The infuriated bear turned and snapped at a front wheel puncturing the tire in three places.

Bruin then scrambled up the bank and disappeared into the woods. The motorist offered as evidence an almost new tire with three holes in it.

COURT PROCLAMATION.

Whereas Hon. Howard F. Marsh, President Judge of the Fourth Judicial district of Pennsylvania, composed of the county of Tioga, has issued his precept, to me directed, for the holding of an Orphans' Court, Court of Common Pleas, General Quarter Sessions and Oyer and Terminer, at Wellsboro, in and for the county of Tioga, Pennsylvania, on the FOURTH MONDAY OF SEPTEMBER (being the 17th day), A. D. 1923, and to continue three weeks.

Notice is therefore hereby given to the Coroner, Justices of the Peace and Constables in and for said county of Tioga to appear in their own proper persons, with their records, inquisitions, exemptions and remembrances to do those things which of their offices and in their behalf appertain to be done, and all witnesses and other persons prosecuting in behalf of the Commonwealth against any person or persons are required to be then and there attending and not to depart at their peril. Jurors are requested to be punctual in their attendance at the appointed time, agreeably to notice.

Under act of 1919, Constables who have no returns to make are not to attend.

Given under my hand and seal at the Sheriff's office in Wellsboro, the 16th day of AUGUST, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.
ELWIN G. KELTS,
Wellsboro, Pa., Aug. 16-5t. Sheriff.
